Vacation: During the normal summer vacation for undergrad students or during one of the other terms if the student has completed the equivalent of an academic year prior to taking the vacation for master level programs.

Medical: If a student is compelled by illness or other medical conditions to interrupt or reduce a full course of study, s/he may be considered to be in status during the illness or other medical condition. Approval must be reauthorized every semester.

Student Completing Their Program: A student who needs fewer than full time credit hours to complete her/his program of study is considered to be pursuing a full course of study, if s/he enrolls in the number of credit hours necessary to complete the program in the final term.

What Should I Do for a Reduced Course Load?

If a student's reduced course load is for vacation or completing a final term, the student does not need to do anything. For other reasons please stop by the International Admissions office for guidance.
