Immigration Highlight

Summer Optional for Grad Students? Not always.

The summer break is not always optional for a graduate student. If you are a new student starting for the first time in either the Winter or Spring quarter, you may take the summer as a break. From that point on, you must complete three full time quarters before being eligible for another break to remain in the U.S. Students who begin in the Winter or Spring do not have to first complete three full time quarters to take the Summer as a break.

But lets say a current grad student goes home for the Winter quarter and returns to continue in the Spring quarter. The summer would not be optional for that student. They would need to complete three full time quarters, including the summer, before being eligible to take a break. Once a grad student takes a break, no matter what quarter it is or if they stay in the U.S. or go home, they must complete three full time quarters before being eligible for another break. Once a student completes at least three full time quarters, they are eligible for a break to remain in the U.S.

Naturalization Ceremony

On April 6, 2009 at 12:30 p.m. in the Koehler building, federal judge Judge Jack Zouhary from Toledo, Ohio will preside over an hour long ceremony to induct those wishing to become U.S. citizens. An audience of about 500 is expected to attend. A reception of punch and cookies will be served beginning at 11:30.
