

SUBSTANCE USE DISORDER (ADDC)

University of Findlay

Program Overview

Substance use disorders impact individuals in all fields including business, healthcare, government, and education. Taking courses that educationally address these issues will provide you with an understanding of how to help individuals recover from substance use disorders. This multi-disciplinary area of study encompasses the biological, psychological, sociological, spiritual, and economic aspects of all types of addictions.

The University of Findlay offers a minor in substance use disorders for students to learn about the complexities sufferers face. Our program is ideal for students pursuing a degree in any area that requires interaction with the public. Current professionals may also take individual courses as non-degree seeking students to become more educated on the topic.

By completing the substance use disorder minor, you will also become eligible to apply for the Chemical Dependency Counselor Assistant (CDCA) certification.

With a CDCA certification you will be able to work with substance use clients under supervision in a variety of settings such as behavioral health agencies, and addiction and treatment centers. During the final course of the minor, you will receive assistance while filling out the application.

Program Highlights

Professional Faculty - All substance use disorder courses are taught by professionals currently working in the field of addictions.

Flexible Courses - Courses can be taken individually to allow students and current professionals to learn about substance use disorders without pursuing a full minor.

Convenient Schedule - Substance use disorder courses are offered in the evenings to work within the busy schedule of non-traditional students.

CDCA Applicable - Students who complete the substance use disorder minor will be eligible to apply for their Chemical Dependency Counselor Assistant (CDCA) certification.
